Brooke Case

LONDON—Edward Crankshaw of the London Observer suggested that the Moscow spy trial of British teacher Gerald Brooke may have been staged to give the Soviets someone to exchange for Morris and Lorna Cohen. The Cohens—an American couple also known as Peter and Helen Kroger—were sentenced to 20-year terms in 1961 for spying on Britain. They were seized at the same time as Gordon Lonsdale, later exchanged for British businessman Greville Wynne, who had been charged with spying by the Russians.
